

APPONYI TAKES TRAIN TO ROOSEVELT HOME

Lets the Colonel Make Auto Trip
Alone Because of the Storm.

CARNEGIE'S LUNCHEON GUEST

And on Auto Tour of the Hungarian
Quarter--To Speak at Carnegie
Hall To-night.

Count Albert Apponyi, who spent most of yesterday as the guest of Andrew Carnegie, first in an automobile tour through the Hungarian quarter of the city and later as guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mr. Carnegie at his home, 2 East Ninety-first Street, left on the 5:30 train last evening for Oyster Bay, and will remain there as the guest of Col. Roosevelt until noon to-day, when he returns to town.

Col. Roosevelt had planned to take the Count from the Hotel Plaza to his home at Oyster Bay in his automobile, but when he called for the Count shortly after 4 yesterday afternoon he found that the distinguished visitor preferred to make the trip in a warm railroad coach instead of in the Colonel's motor car, which is of the touring type, and offers little protection from a storm.

Col. Roosevelt was all bundled up in furs and a fur cap came well down over his ears when his car rolled up to the Fifty-ninth Street entrance to the Plaza. He sent word to the Count that he was waiting, but word came back that the Count was afraid to risk the thirty-mile ride in the snowstorm, especially as he is to speak to-night at Carnegie Hall. Col. Roosevelt thereupon went up to the Count's suite on the tenth floor.

There were only a few in the lobby who recognized the Colonel in his heavy coat and furs, which were covered with snow, as he passed through to the elevator.

Meantime the Count's secretary was looking up the next train to Oyster Bay. The Count had planned to go on the 4:28, but the Colonel's visit made that impossible. The Count took the 5:30 train at the Pennsylvania Station, and the Colonel assured him that he would be at the Oyster Bay Station to meet him in his automobile at 6:30. The snowstorm, however, prevented the Colonel's chauffeur from making the thirty miles in the time specified, and when the Count arrived at Oyster Bay he was met by Miss Ethel Roosevelt, who evidently had received word from her father en route to be at the station for the 6:30 train.

The Count commenced his programme yesterday by a visit to the National City Bank, whence he went to the Hamilton Fish public library in East Houston Street. The Count was very much interested in this library, because it contains the largest Hungarian book collection of any public library in the city. It was inaugurated when Count Apponyi was Minister of Education, and he caused 1,000 volumes to be donated to the library.

After inspecting the office of The Hungarian-American People's Voice, at Second Avenue and Thirteenth Street, he drove to the Austro-Hungarian Consulate, 123 East Seventeenth Street, where he was entertained by Alexander Nuber de Pereked, the Consul General.

Then he went to the Carnegie luncheon. Among the guests were Bishop David H. Greer, ex-Judge Alton B. Parker, Col. Albert Shaw, George H. Putnam, Horace White, John A. Stewart, Samuel T. Dutton, George W. Kirchway, James Speyer, Frederick Lynch, and Alexander Nuber de Pereked.

To-night Count Apponyi will deliver his address at Carnegie Hall on "Some Practical Difficulties of the Peace Problem in Europe," under the joint auspices of the Civic Forum and the New York Peace Society. Ex-Mayor Seth Low will preside and will introduce Count Apponyi. After the lecture Andrew Carnegie will move a vote of thanks to the Count for his efforts on behalf of international peace. G. D. Berko, the President of the Reception Committee of the New York Hungarian Committees, will present Count Apponyi with a silver wreath, making his speech in Magyar. The guests of honor will be Mayor Gaynor, Baron von Hengelmuller, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador; Archbishop Farley, Consul General Alexander Nuber de Pereked, and Andrew Carnegie.
